PLEASANT FIELDS OF HOLY WRIT

Save for my daily range
Among the pleasant fields of Holy Writ,
I might despair.—Tennyson.

First Quarter, Lesson VI, Genesis xlii, 1-8, February 10, 1907.

ABRAHAM CALLED TO BE A BLESSING.

Four centuries and a quarter had passed since the Flood. Noah himself had been dead only seventy-five years. Yet the new race seemed as deeply sunk in sin as the old. The goodness and severity of God in the Deluge appeared to have been in vain. In fact, the world was a general degeneracy some few tapers, like that of Melchisedec on Zion, were yet a light; but even these were in danger of extinction by the violence of the wicked.

The race was in revolt against God. It had built its defiant tower, whose lofty stories were to be a refuge in case of a second flood. It seemed to have learned nothing by the sudden judgment which confounded its language and scattered it abroad. The first chapter of the Epistle to the Romans gives a faithful portrayal of the moral condition of the race at this period. Though they knew God, they glorified Him not as God, were yet a light; but even these were in danger of extinction by the violence of the wicked.
